*Do you feel like there is more to evaluation than current assessment tools provide, but you're not sure where to turn?
Are your current lethality assessments and abuse histories enough to adequately understand and predict future intimate partner violence and sexual assault?*

Would you like to learn more about what to assess with individual perpetrators within your community? If so, join us at this training and learn more about personality issues among those who are violent and abusive to others.

Conference Information

Craig N. Ackley, President of the Behavioral Science Education and Consultation Services, Inc., in Spotsylvania, Virginia, will help participants shift their thinking about intimate partner abuse violence and sexual assault assessments. Craig is a retired law enforcement officer of 26 years, the last 21 as a Special Agent with the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). He retired from the Behavioral Analysis Unit (BAU) of the FBI's National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime (NCAVC), FBI Academy, Quantico, VA, where he provided behavioral support and training in violent crime matters to federal, state, local, and foreign law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies.

Historically, emphasis has been placed on the presence of risk factors, such as prior physical or psychological abuse, threatening behavior, substance use, and access to weapons. While these and other traditional risk factors are critical to evaluate, they are only part of the equation when trying to understand the dynamics of any given offense. It is equally important to consider the personality traits and characteristics of the specific offender.

This training is designed to provide familiarity with various personality issues involved in intimate partner violence, particularly as they relate to lethality. The motivations and subsequent behaviors in sexual offenses are also as diverse as the offenders themselves. Information will be shared to help participants better understand personality issues as they relate to characteristics and motivations of sexual offenders.

We have limited space for this training, so be sure to get yourself and your co-workers registered soon.
